Land Acknowledgment

The Rural Development Network (RDN) sincerely acknowledges that our physical office is located on the Traditional Territories of Treaty 6 and home to Métis Nation Region 4. I currently live in Amiskwaciwâskahikan, also known as Beaver Hills House or Edmonton.

We acknowledge the ancestral and unceded territory of all the Inuit, Métis, and First Nations people that call this land home and who have gathered on these lands for centuries. It is important to reaffirm my personal and our organization's responsibility and commitment to reconciliation and respecting the diverse histories and cultures of Indigenous peoples.

Rural homelessness in Alberta a 'hidden crisis': new study

Jason Herring

2 days ago • 2 minute read

Homelessness and home insecurity is a problem in rural Alberta too, although it's often not visible as it is in urban areas, a new study has found. AL CHAREST / Postmedia

Homelessness is pervasive even outside of Alberta's urban centres, according to a new study into the scope of the problem in the province's rural communities.

The report is touted by the Alberta Rural Development Network (ARDN) as the largest co-ordinated count of homelessness and housing instability ever completed in rural Alberta, and was completed in co-ordination with local service agencies operating in 20 communities.

- Sleeping rough or camping
- Living in vehicles or abandoned buildings
- Sleeping in emergency shelters
- Couch surfing
- Inadequate and unsafe housing
- Indigenous Homelessness (Thistle, 2017)

Challenges Rural Communities Face

- Limited and inconsistent funding
- Lack of emergency shelter, affordable, transitional and permanent supportive housing
- Transportation barriers
- Lack of mental health and addictions supports
- Developing culturally appropriate responses to Indigenous Homelessness
- Community engagement and education
- Capacity to implement coordinated community responses
- Data gaps

“Changing Horses is probably the first group ever on the Blood Tribe reserve that has gotten together not under the umbrella of chief and council that has started something like this to provide the housing for some of our homeless...To others looking out at us, it’s a small project. But, for us, it’s a big project. It is not going to house everyone that needs to be housed, but we have got to start somewhere. I believe if we are able to do that, we could do a lot more on the Blood Tribe reserve and other First Nation communities.”

Rural communities are reporting a rise in homelessness among older adults

Older adults are considered 65+ and comprise of 17% of Canada's population (Statistics Canada, 2020).

Peace River opens first overnight homeless shelter

Rural homelessness an issue often unseen, unacknowledged

The small northern Alberta town of Peace River will open its first overnight winter shelter on Sunday.

The volunteer-run operation will open its doors every night until late April from 10 p.m. to 7 a.m.

Marc Boychuk, one of the organizers, said homeless people often go unseen in smaller communities, with people sleeping in cars, in back alleys, or in tents out of the eye of the public.

"Two, three years ago I didn't even know we had homeless in our community, and I think the vast majority of our community didn't," Boychuk said Friday. "And the vast majority, like myself, are quite appalled and shocked at what some people have to put up with and how they're living."

"And they want that to end, now."

Canmore pilot project offering shelter from the cold

"They may be going through a rough patch, or may have suffered some kind of traumatic event. This gives them the opportunity to be safe and hopefully we will be able to connect them through the various helping agencies in the Bow Valley to accommodation that meets their needs."
